Is a steampunk fantasy based MMO that takes place during an epic struggle between two major factions: the technologically driven Kingdom of Isenhorst and the nature loving magical Erlandir Union.. We recently got the chance to play test, the newest from Snail Games USA, the developers that brought us recently Age of Wushu.. We were able to play either a male or female, though in all honesty the female Dwarf didn't look particularly dwarven to us and seemed a little more pixie if anything.

We started our test doing a quick sweep over the character creation, currently there is two races available for each faction with a third race available for both in the future, for our play test we turned to the Dwarves of Isenhorst, classic builders and inventors that had invented most of the steam driven technology that exists in the kingdom today.. The game has not yet hit the full release but will be completely free to play once it goes live.. There is a full range of sliders and other customisation options to create a more unique looking character, depending on the race that you decide to choose.. We chose Spectromancer as our class and when we hit next it decided it was going to make us be a female character, which seemed to be the default, and by hitting back to see if we'd missed the gender selection we were inadvertently set back to playing as being the Punisher class.

Life Stepping into the game for the first time we were greeted with a large cinematic revolving around an invasion on an island from the Erlandir, taking us into the action, which was essentially a tutorial area where as we progressed across the island fighting off a few enemies we would hit waypoints that would trigger a new cut scene is story progressed.. We had a wide selection of classes to choose from and interestingly some of the classes are gender locked, such as the Occultist who can only be played as by female characters. Eset For Mac Os
